WHAT OF CITY

Editor, The Record:

As well known and as well spoken of as Greensboro is and has been in the past, I feel that, at the present, we are an "under-dog."

If the Negro students at A&T and elsewhere, as well as the girls at WC who sympathized with them do not like our city and our way of life and are unable to adjust themselves, I feel it is high time they moved out and went where living habits and customs are to their way of thinking and liking. As I recently read in the newspapers, "this is a Christian movement," I'd like to know since when did the Bible say, "stir up wrath"? Are these students "self-righteous"? I feel that God Almighty cannot be "overpowered" without someone getting hurt. Can these students truthfully enjoy a meal, knowing that there are employees of Woolworth's and Kress' without an income, and possibly food to go on their tables? It is time they got on their knees and asked forgiveness and for holy guidance.

I feel that there are still a great number of Negroes who have pride and are well-bred. They have been taught properly that they are Negroes and can accept it and adjust themselves to this fact. In doing so they seek joy and contentment in their own race and are more gainful and well-praised in doing so. This means, to me, these are smart and well-bred. They realize, as well as others, that if God intended for us to "mix" He would have made us all the same race and color, and, believe me, there are some white people in the same category on mixing that don't carry a bit of pride and well-breeding. God pity them all. They need it.

I feel, deep inside, that we all have been given an equal heart, with equal knowledge, and that we all should have equal living and conveniences—yet, we were not made to mix. Yet, every man to his opinion.

But, I still say if these students cannot make the necessary adjustment to Greensboro's customs, the sooner they leave our city the better.
