Remarks Made On TV Program

The president of the student body at the University of North Carolina said in Washington yesterday that the Negro student sitdown movement protesting segregation at dime store lunch counters might "get the Negro a hamburger" but wouldn't solve the South's racial problems.

And on a network television program originating from Washington yesterday, a student at Atlanta's Emory University said that while only a small percentage of white students in the South oppose the sitdown movement, "A large majority are not about to become actively interested in it."

David Griggs, the UNC student body president, made his remarks while opposing a resolution before delegates to the National Student Conference on the Sit-In Movement which endorsed the demonstrations.

The resolution later was adopted, with about half the students at the conference voting on it.

Network Panelist

The Atlanta student, James Alritz, was a panelist on the ABC network "College News Conference" program at which Reps. James C. Davis (D-Ga.) and George A. Kasem (D-Calif.) questioned he and four other college students.

Among them were Albert Rozier of A&T College here; Diane Nash of Fisk University (for Negroes) at Nashville, Tenn.; Marvin Robinson of Southern University at Baton Rouge, La., and Rolf Kjolspeth of the University of Colorado.

'Spontaneous'

Rozier, in answer to a question by Davis, said the movement which began in Greensboro Feb. 1, was "completely spontaneous" here when it started but now has some organized support.

Robinson said the movement in Baton Rouge also was spontaneous in the beginning but that the NAACP had since been asked to help.

He and 16 other Southern University students are to be arraigned Wednesday on charges of disturbing the peace after a demonstration in Baton Rouge.

Departs From Format

Rep. Davis departed from the television program's format by reading from what he said were records furnished him by the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

He said the committee had issued citations for nine of 16 advisory personnel affiliated with the Congress on Racial Equality. The CORE organization has taken an active part in the sitdown demonstrations in the Carolinas.

Earlier in the program Miss Nash, the Fisk University student, said "segregation is one of the things that is aiding the cause of communism more than anything else today."
